The Rachis Occasional Table sketches a neat, frozen gesture of a tree being cut down; or the kinetics of an oscillating, teetering stack of cups and saucers which might be described as Lewis Carollesque. It adds instant flavour to a space, though its unassertive size prevents it from overwhelming a room.

Each porcelain tile in the Textural Wall Tile collection by Heather Knight is created from conception completely by hand. Inspired by nature, her work is recognisable for its striking combination of modern aesthetic with textures, patterns and shapes. The range includes a vast array of different textures and is available in a full and micro version.

THE APEX TABLE by Hunting and Narud quite literally turns design on its head. In a reverse from the norm, hand-blown glass vessels encase and support turned wooden cones. With minimal contact between the two materials, the apex of the cone which is a small five millimetres point is the only part of the wood in direct contact with the glass creating a sharp visual contrast whilst encapsulating and highlighting the beauty of the wooden cones.
